

Erik Wendt upholds a Master in Geography and International Development Studies. In his professional career of more than 25 years he has contributed to planning and execution of development projects and programs. He has theoretical and practical experience in devising participatory and people's-oriented programming for poverty alleviation and securing equal rights. Working and living in Asia for almost two decades he has sufficient experience to understand the prospects for successes and also avoiding the numerous pitfalls in the organised struggle against violence and torture.
